Journal Writing: Why Kids Should Journal Some kids keep their feelings to themselves because they do not feel comfortable saying them out loud. They fear being ridiculed or believe that their thoughts and feelings are not important enough to share openly. Journal writing gives kids a judgment-free space to self-explore and finds their creative voice. They can use their journal as a place to dream and set goals. They can also use journal writing to find solutions to internal conflicts and solve problems. There are no rules on how to keep a journal. Some children prefer to free write, while others like to follow journal writing prompts. The key is that children view their journal as a safe space to write their thoughts and feelings. When children trust that keeping a journal is safe, they feel more comfortable expressing their authentic selves through journal writing.
