In 2007, the Los Angeles Police Department (LAPD) redesigned their Academy curriculum to the needs of the 21st century police officer (Incontro et al 2008). Part of the redesign is an evaluation of existing programs including the Academy Training Program (ATP). Academy recruits that do not pass the physical fitness requirements Academy are placed into a one-month intensive fitness-training program that enhances the recruits' physical performance thereby enabling them to rejoin the six-month Academy program. The physical training assists police officers in mastering skills that not only buffer them against adverse effects of job-related stress and trauma but also reduce work-related compensation due to work-related injuries or disability. Due to past legal action with regard to discrimination and physical fitness standards/cut-offs, the development and maintenance of a physical fitness program that is sensitive to discrimination while maintaining performance standards for police training recruits is crucial (Brooks, 2001). Utilizing Logistic Regression, the aim of the current study is to analyze participation in the ATP on attrition rates and the variable of gender. Results of the current study will be used to provide information on police training in the area of physical fitness. training sessions detailing over 80 practices and progressions used in the academies of the Serie 'A'. Each session focuses "from simple practices to more complex game situations." The book outlines a complete program of training across the 12 sessions.

The 12 sessions (over 80 practices) cover the following attributes: Technical training; passing and receiving, quick combination play, possession, ball control and dribbling, 1 v 1 feints and moves to beat, crossing, finishing, shooting and heading, football specific conditioning with and without the ball, coordination, acceleration, speed, and agility training.
Tactical training; game situations, tactical small sided game phase of plays, creating space and improving game intelligence possession play, attacking combinations, Psycho-Kinetics (Think and Act Quickly), quick transitional play, defensive positioning, set plays, build-up play from the back and more.
